Professor Martin Ligare, Chairperson of the Faculty, will preside. Any corrections to the December 2007 minutes should be sent to Faculty Secretary Philippe Dubois prior to the meeting.

AGENDA

1. Amendments to and approval of December 2007 minutes

2. Announcements and remarks by the President

3. Announcements and remarks by the Chair of the Faculty

4. Committee Reports:

   a. Committee on Instruction

   The Committee on Instruction (CoI) has completed revision of the proposed Bucknell University Educational Goals (BUEC), and offers them for endorsement by the faculty.

   The goals were prepared over the last semester and underwent several revisions: An ad hoc committee formed by CoI was charged with creating the first draft of the goals.

   This draft was sent to the entire campus community and discussed by various constituencies of our governance system. CoI solicited feedback via email and through two open forums. After deliberation, CoI produced a second draft of the BUEC that was then submitted to the floor of the faculty for further comments. The version you see here is the third version of the BUEC. CoI would like to thank all who have contributed to this important endeavor.

   CoI notes that the members of CoI deliberated extensively and that each comment and suggestion that was sent to the committee was considered thoroughly. In the course of revising the goals, the committee often had to make difficult decisions. We also note that this list of goals is only one part of a larger statement on the University’s strategic educational vision. Some of the comments that CoI received were relevant to other parts of that larger document, which is still under revision.

   It is our hope that after the extensive and rigorous process outlined above, the faculty will agree that these goals are appropriate to the University and will endorse them as a whole.

Report from the Committee on Faculty and Academic Personnel, February 2008

For several years, the Board of Trustees has been using a compensation model which targets the middle range of our peer institutions to determine faculty salaries. This model has, in general, been very good for faculty salaries, as we document below.

The Board has now authorized a 5.2% average salary increase for faculty next year using this model. The Faculty and Academic Personnel Committee (FAPC) is charged with allocating that salary increase in such a way that maintains the current salary rank relative to peer institutions of each faculty group (assistant, associate and full professors). Last year, the Board decided to increase the salaries of assistant professors significantly to attract the best possible candidates, while maintaining the ranks of associate and full professors. Thus, average assistant professor salaries currently rank 4th among our 11 frame of reference institutions while average associate and full professor salaries rank 6th.

Given the goals stated above, and the 5.2% average salary increase approved by the board, this year we recommended the following average salary increases by rank:

- 5.35% average increase for assistant professors,
- 5.41% average increase for associate professors
- 4.80% average increase for full professors.

We recommended this allocation on the following basis:
(1) This allocation will preserve the current salary ranking with respect to peer institutions of all three professorial ranks.
(2) Last year’s differential increases caused significant compression issues; this year’s recommendation will reduce compression slightly by allocating slightly more money to the associate professor pool.

Note that the percentages above are averages by rank.

Your raise is likely to be higher than the average for your rank if:
- You were promoted
- You have a higher than average merit score, and/or your salary is below the average for your rank (due to the fact that merit pay is allocated in fixed dollar amounts rather than as a percentage)

Your raise may be lower than the average for your rank if:
- Your salary is at or above the average salary for your rank (due to the fact that merit pay is allocated in fixed dollar amounts rather than as a percentage), or your merit score is below the average merit score for faculty in your rank
We continue to believe that the current compensation model is very good for faculty in general. Over the last 4 years, it has produced the following raises:

Bucknell faculty are doing substantially better than most workers in the current economy under this compensation model. Thus, despite some salary compression in the assistant and associate professor ranks, the model seems to have substantial benefits for Bucknell faculty overall.
